

Zeitschrift: Swiss review : the magazine for the Swiss abroad
Herausgeber: Organisation of the Swiss Abroad
Band: 6 (1979)
Heft: 1

Artikel: Grisons embroideries
Autor: Wanner-Jeanrichard, Anne
DOI: <https://doi.org/10.5169/seals-907884>

Nutzungsbedingungen

Die ETH-Bibliothek ist die Anbieterin der digitalisierten Zeitschriften. Sie besitzt keine Urheberrechte an den Zeitschriften und ist nicht verantwortlich für deren Inhalte. Die Rechte liegen in der Regel bei den Herausgebern beziehungsweise den externen Rechteinhabern. Siehe Rechtliche Hinweise.

Conditions d'utilisation

L'ETH Library est le fournisseur des revues numérisées. Elle ne détient aucun droit d'auteur sur les revues et n'est pas responsable de leur contenu. En règle générale, les droits sont détenus par les éditeurs ou les détenteurs de droits externes. Voir Informations légales.

Terms of use

The ETH Library is the provider of the digitised journals. It does not own any copyrights to the journals and is not responsible for their content. The rights usually lie with the publishers or the external rights holders. See Legal notice.

Download PDF: 28.04.2025

ETH-Bibliothek Zürich, E-Periodica, <https://www.e-periodica.ch>

Grisons embroideries

The Swiss National Museum in Zurich was opened in 1898 and houses the largest cultural and historic collection of Switzerland. In changing exhibitions, it presents an easily comprehensible picture of Swiss culture in past eras. On the occasion of its 80th anniversary, the firm «Läckerli-Huus» in Basle has chosen an Engadine comb-bag as model for its new Leckerli tin; the bag is one of the show-pieces of the extensive textile collection of the Museum.

On the four side panels of the new tin, the embroideries are pictured which decorate the four sections of the comb-bag.

Comb-bags were made in various materials: samples in clay, wood leather, paper are known apart from those in cloth. According to the name, toilet articles should have been kept in the bags, such as hairpins or combs. Since none of the Engadine comb-bags made from textiles show any signs of wear which would indicate such use, one assumes that flat articles only were put inside: perhaps some popular texts, perhaps exam papers or samples, congratulatory cards or letters from members of the family overseas. The embroidered decorations are usually most beautiful and thus made the bags into genuine ornaments which hung next to the looking-glass in the living room and helped to embellish the room.

Perhaps some botanical work of that epoch provided the models. The empty patches in the composition were filled in with pansies, and between the figures and the border of the bag, one placed lilies of the valley which almost look like little trees. The ladies are dressed in the fashion of the French Court, with small waists and sleeves which are decorated with various ribbons and whose cuffs open up wide. Typical of the years around 1685–1715 in the pictured headgear, the so-called fontange: hair, both one's own and artificial, was pulled high on a wire construction in the shape of a pyramid. Another interesting peculiarity of that time was reproduced in art-needlework, the iron support which is inserted vertically in the front of the dress. The ladies represented various characteristics, and their attributes signified what allegories were involved. So for instance, the anchor means that its bearer is hope personified, sword and scales are worn by a woman of justice, the lamb signifies patience, and the serpent wound around a cross means faithfulness. These are just the best-known symbols.

The Swiss National Museum in Zurich

Mrs Anne Wanner-JeanRichard
(Dr.phil.)

(photos Swiss National Museum)