The Segantini Atelier in Maloja

One of the most important works of Giovanni Segantini, the Triptychon «To come into existence, to be, to pass away» – Birth – Life – Death (Natura – Vita – Morte) acquired by the Gottfried Keller Foundation, Zurich, has been in the Segantini Museum in St. Moritz since 1908 as a donation. This Triptychon was a contract given to Segantini for the World Exhibition of 1900 in Paris. With a «full-scale Alpine Symphony» one wanted to advertise for the Upper Engadine in the Swiss Pavillon, at the time of the up-coming Alpine Tourism. This proud project failed, thereupon, due to lack of finances. The Swiss

The Segantini Family has lived in Maloja since 1894, and from time to time also in Soglio in Bergell. There Segantini's work «Life» came into being and there also emerged the initial, simple, rounded construction made from fir-wood, which was later on transported to Maloja. Pavillon in Paris was conceived as a dome-shaped construction. Therefore the Rotundas in St. Moritz and in Maloja.

The Atelier in Maloja can be defined as a counterpart to the Museum in St. Moritz. This studio, the «Atelier Giovanni, Gottardo and Mario Segantini», in short, «The Atelier Segantini», has been accessible to the public since Summer 1985. Swiss Francs 200,000 were made available by various parties for the restoration of this rotund-construction.

an «open air painting». His fibrous, compact, thin brushstrokes are typical and are known as «Divisionism». Francesco Arcangeli writes about him: «His inclination towards the Alps was for him much more natural than the longing of van Gogh for the Provence and the partiality of Gauguin for Tahiti. Nevertheless, all these poles of attraction lead back to the same meaning: to break out of the civilised world and find a way back to a pure life.»

Segantini died in 1899 on the Schafberg, where he had climbed to work on the Triptychon «Natur». Never had he painted in the Rotunda in Maloja. On the other hand this round construction was later used by his sons Gottardo and Mario as a studio. The commemorative chamber in Maloja with the works of the three painters can be visited daily until October between 3.00 and 6.00 p. m. except on Mondays. ●
