Agreement with reservations

Both houses of parliament ensured that the Fifth Switzerland was not left out in the rain.

BY LUKAS M. SCHNEIDER

After much polemics, parliament has approved the reform of the voluntary AHV/IV. What changes does this entail for our compatriots abroad?

THE RECENT SUMMER SESSION of parliament saw a solution to the most hotly contested Swiss Abroad topic for years: the revision of the voluntary insurance scheme. In the final vote the bill was approved by 153 to 15 in the National Council and 40 to 0 in the State Council.

The Organisation of the Swiss Abroad (OSA), which advocates the interests of the Fifth Switzerland, expressed general relief that the radical plans expounded in the 1990s for a discontinuation of the voluntary AHV had been definitively ousted.

Restricted entitlement

However, in future entitlement to the voluntary old age insurance scheme will be severely restricted to include only Swiss citizens and EU citizens living outside the European Union who have been enrolled in obligatory insurance scheme for at least five continuous years immediately prior to the new law. By contrast, Swiss citizens living in one of the 15 EU member states will no longer be able to join the voluntary AHV/IV scheme once the revised law comes into force.

Current members have six years within which to pay premiums, and members over age 50 are entitled to remain in the scheme until they reach retirement age. Established claims are not affected. Swiss nationals resident in the EU who are not yet enrolled in the voluntary AHV scheme must apply for membership by end of this year.

The insurance clause for disability pensions has been lifted, so that persons who have been enrolled in the Swiss insurance scheme for at least one year are entitled to a disability pension even if they were no longer insured at the onset of disability. Premiums are based on the effective years during which contributions were paid.

Increase in contribution rate

In line with the obligatory insurance scheme, the contribution rate has been raised from 9.2 to 9.8 percent. The minimum annual premium for voluntary insurance members is to be doubled from CHF 324 to CHF 648 for AHV and CHF 108 for IV. Additionally, the declining premium scale for small incomes has been lifted. Originally the State Council decided to triple the minimum contribution (see “Swiss Review” 3/00, page 18). However, this was deemed too harsh by the lower house, and members of the State Council eventually voted unanimously for the National Council variant.

The government hopes that this revision in voluntary insurance will reduce this branch of social security which, according to the Federal Office of Social Security, is heavily in deficit. In its message of 28 April 1999 the national government projected that this would accumulate savings of CHF 117 million over “several decades”. The OSA has always regarded this savings potential with scepticism, not least due to the growing threat of welfare cases. Whatever the case, these recent decisions have now cut the savings potential for voluntary AHV by several million francs. The exact date when the amendments come into force has not yet been defined.

All’s well that ends well? Not quite. “While we can assume that the discussion on the revision of voluntary insurance is now closed, it must be also be said that the solution creates new problems which need to be resolved within the foreseeable future,” says Rudolf Wyder, Director of the OSA. This primarily concerns non-working Swiss nationals resident in the EU, who must continue to be offered an insurance option in Switzerland. The OSA is committed to promoting this option as part of the 11th AHV revision.
