Technotopias: Texts, Identities, and Technological Cultures. 10th to 12th July 2002, Glasgow, UK. An Interdisciplinary Conference organised by the Department of English Studies, University of Strathclyde

The University of Strathclyde is a world leader in science and engineering yet, like many similar institutions, it maintains a strong commitment to the humanities. In societies that seem to place increasing emphasis on the application of technology and scientific knowledge this kind of commitment is sometimes seen as irrelevant. For humanities departments this situation raises new questions of identity, within both university faculties and cultural discourses itself. In the light of this situation Technotopias aims to investigate the complex historical and contemporary interplay between the humanities and technology. Firstly, Technotopias aims to reflect upon the place of the arts within modern academia; secondly, to investigate the complex historical and contemporary interplay between the humanities and technology; and finally, to address the impact of these relationships upon the formation of physical and cultural identities. To realise the interdisciplinary nature of this conference, papers from all fields of literary and cultural criticism, as well as the scientific and technological disciplines will be presented.
