EARLY ROMAN VILLAGE DISCOVERED.

Fifteen years ago excavations were made on a church hill of Oberwinterthur and remains of an old settlement from the Roman period was noticed. While excavating for a new community centre now it has been discovered that in the first century A.D. this was at that time totally destroyed by fire but immediately rebuilt. Remains were discovered of wooden buildings (Holzriegelbauten) with clay and lime floors. Quite a number of Roman utensils were also found, such as plates, pieces of glass, bronze coins and a small oil lamp. The excavations are directed by Professor Dr. Vogt of the Swiss National Museum.
