Swissair: 1977 a Year of Jubilees

In the current year Swissair can commemorate a series of important events of its corporate history.

In April 1957, the Swiss air carrier had with four-engined DC-6Bs inaugurated its Far East services to Tokyo. In the twenty years that have elapsed since then, this traffic area has become an essential segment of Swissair's world-wide network which today has a total length of 284,492 kms and comprises 88 destinations on all continents except Australia.

In the same month two decades ago, Swissair had extended its line to South America via Montevideo in Uruguay to Argentine's capital Buenos Aires.

Dating back to thirty years are Swissair's services to various ports of call in the Middle East. Using four-engined DC14s on all long-distance flights in 1947, Swissair also took up its first flights across the North Atlantic between Geneva and New York, on a trial basis first, then from 1948 onward as a scheduled operation.
