SWISS ARMY

With the reduction of the Swiss army, more and more units are being disbanded and their individual flags rolled up and stored away, perhaps for ever. Further casualties are the women's military bands whose performances used to add a distinctive feminine touch to a rather harsh army environment.

However, women can now enrol individually into military bands and perform alongside their male counterparts. So from now on, Swiss military bands will be mixed affairs, a further and welcome departure from the old segregation between male and female army units.

One of the farewell concerts presented by one of the now disbanded women's military bands.

TRADE RESULTS BETWEEN SWITZERLAND AND NEW ZEALAND

Here are the figures for 1994 of the trading in various commodities between the two countries:

Commodity	NZ export to Switzerland in 1000 SFR	Swiss export to NZ in 1000 SFR	Commodity	NZ export to Switzerland in 1000 SFR	Swiss export to NZ in 1000 SFR
Farm products	54,000	3,696	Machinery	1,832	44,218
Chemical products	289	19,730	Cars & Aircraft	331	560
Pharmaceutical	308	29,666	Instruments,
Rubber products	186	4,270	Appliances	2,085	11,208
Leather goods	917	92	Watches	-	2,174
Wood & Cork products	81	43	Arms & Amunition	-	26
Paper	1,000	750	Furniture &
Textile & Clothing	1,422	2,992	Accessories	221	356
Shoes	72	216	Toys & Sport
Ceramic, Glassware	8	1,669	equipment	96	529
Jewellery, Coins			Minerals	6	-
Precious metals	253	80	Electric cables	-	10
Metal products	442	7,473
				63,549	129,758

According to these figures, Switzerland exports to New Zealand just about twice as much as it imports. But the figures even out if you set them against each country's population (some 6 million Swiss against some 3 million Kiwis). In total these trade figures are very small as they only amount to about $20 per year and per head of population.

NOT SAFE AT ALL

What could be safer than a safe in a police station? Anything else at the station except the content of the safe itself according to the following story.

At the Zurich Airport police station, over 150,000 SFR in cash was stolen from their safe. However, this was not the heroic feat by a very astute burglar because, due to a sense of over-confidence on the part of the police force, the safe was practically never locked. If this already seems incredible, the additional twist is that the "robbery" was only discovered months after it happened. The money had been uplifted from a suspicious looking passenger in April 1994 and placed for "safe keeping" in the mostly unlocked safe. The money's disappearance was not discovered until last September. Up to now the police have no idea where the money went and who could have taken it as access to the safe was available not only to the policemen at the station, but also to maintenance and cleaning staff and anyone else who had to do business at the station.

Almost a story for the Keystone Cops....
