Notes on Contributors

JULIANNA BARK is currently working as a research assistant in the English Department of the University of Geneva. She is writing a doctoral thesis on printed portraits of literary authors in early modern England, and their relationship to perceptions of authorship in that period. She holds a licence ès lettres in English, Art History and Photography from the University of Geneva, as well as an MA and PhD in Art History from the Institute of Fine Art at New York University.

JOHN BLAKELEY is a senior lecturer in English Literature at University College Plymouth St Mark and St John. His main research interest lies in the commercialisation of literature in the late-Elizabethan period. He has published on Robert Greene and is currently writing about Marlowe's Tamburlaine plays. He is also interested in adaptations of early modern drama to film and cinematic representations of the Renaissance. He has published in Shakespeare Bulletin and is now researching the Shakespeare and Renaissance films of Derek Jarman.

GUILLEMETTE BOLENS is Professor of English Literature at the University of Geneva, where she teaches medieval literature with a focus on the history of the body and kinesis. Her essays have appeared in Poetics Today, History and Philosophy of the Life Sciences, European Joyce Studies, and Oral Tradition, and she received the Latsis Award and the Hélène and Victor Barbour Award for her book La Logique du corps articulaire: Les articulations du corps humain dans la littérature occidentale (2001/2007). Her book Le Style des gestes: Corporeité et kinésie dans le récit littéraire was published in 2008, and its English translation is forthcoming at the Johns Hopkins University Press.

COLIN BURROW is a Senior Research Fellow at All Souls College, Oxford. He is the author of Epic Romance: Homer to Milton (1993), Edmund Spenser (1996) and the editor of The Complete Sonnets and Poems for the Oxford Shakespeare (2002), Metaphysical Poetry (2006), of the Poems for the forthcoming Cambridge Edition of the Complete Works of Ben Jonson, and of a collection of essays on manuscript miscellanies forthcoming in English Manuscript Studies. He has published many articles on early modern literature, chiefly on aspects of classical reception, and reviews regularly on a range of topics in The London Review of Books. He is presently working on Shakespeare and Classical Antiquity for the Oxford Shakespeare Topics series, on a book on the theory and practice of literary imitation, and on the Elizabethan volume of the Oxford English Literary History.

PATRICK CHENEY is Distinguished Professor of English and Comparative Literature at Penn State University. He has written five books on early modern authorship, including, most recently, Shakespeare's Literary Authorship (2008) and Marlowe's Republican Authorship: Lucan, Liberty, and the Sublime (2009). Future plans include writing a book on "English Authorship and the Early Modern Sublime."

HELEN COOPER is Professor of Medieval and Renaissance English at the University of Cambridge, and a Fellow of Magdalene College. She has written extensively on medieval literature and its afterlife, in particular in Pastoral: Mediaeval into Renaissance (1978); The Structure of the Canterbury Tales (1983); Oxford Guides to Chaucer: The Canterbury Tales (1989); The English Romance in Time: Transforming Motifs from Geoffrey of Monmouth to the Death of Shakespeare (2004); and Shakespeare and the Medieval World (2010).

RITA COPELAND is Professor of Classics, English, and Comparative Literature at the University of Pennsylvania. Her fields of interest include medieval literature, classical traditions in the Middle Ages, the history of rhetoric and especially medieval rhetoric, the history of literary theory, the history of education, and intellectual history. Books: Rhetoric, Hermeneutics, and Translation in the Middle Ages (1991/95); ed., Criticism and Dissent in the Middle Ages (1996); Pedagogy, Intellectuals and Dissent in the Middle Ages (2001); with Ineke Sluiter, Medieval Grammar and Rhetoric: Language Arts and Literary Theory, AD 300-1475 (2009); ed., with Christopher Cannon and Nicolette Zeeman, Medieval Grammar and the Literary Arts (special issue of New Medieval Literatures), 2009; ed., with Peter Struck, The Cambridge Companion to Allegory (2010). She is co-founder and co-editor of the journal New Medieval Literatures, and co-editor, with Jill Ross, of Toronto Series in Medieval and Early Modern Rhetoric. Her current project is The Oxford History of Classical Reception in English Literature vol. 1, The Middle Ages.

STEFANIA D'AGATA D'OTTAVI is Professor of English at the Università per Stranieri di Siena, where she also teaches "History of the English Language." She has worked on Thomas More, Shakespeare, Blake, Charlotte Brontë and Thomas Hardy, but is now focusing on the study of Medieval literature. Her publications include a book on the mise en abyrne in Chaucer's dream poems (Il sogno e il libro, 1992), the first Italian verse translation of the B-version of Piers Plowman, and essays on the Medieval theatre and on the Canterbury Tales. She is mainly interested in the relationship between late-Medieval philosophy (especially logic) and the literature of the time and is currently working on a book devoted to Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde.

EMMA DEPLEDGE is currently employed as a research assistant at the University of Geneva, where she teaches Renaissance and Restoration literature. She is completing a doctoral thesis entitled "Shakespeare Alterations of the Exclusion Crisis: Politics, Rape, and Authorship." Her PhD research explores the impact the Crisis had on Shakespeare's authorial afterlife, and the way in which new or altered scenes of rape were inserted into Shakespeare plays in order to provide commentary on the events of the late 1670s and 1680s.

ROBERT R. EDWARDS is Edwin Erle Sparks Professor of English and Comparative Literature at the Pennsylvania State University and a Life Member of Clare Hall, Cambridge. He is the author of The Flight from Desire (2006), Chaucer and Boccaccio: Antiquity and Modernity (2002), The Dream of Chaucer: Representation and Reflection in Chaucer's Early Narrative (1989), Ratio and Invention: A Study of Medieval Lyric and Narrative (1989), and The Montecassino Passion and the Poetics of Medieval Drama (1977). He has edited John Lydgate's Siege of Thebes (2001) and selections from Troy Book (1998) and The Poetry of Guido Guinizelli (1987). He is the editor or co-editor of essay collections on medieval narrative and medieval marriage and sexuality. His research focuses on intertextuality in medieval English, Latin, and Romance literature.

LUKAS ERNE is Professor of English at the University of Geneva. He is the author of Shakespeare's Modern Collaborators (2008), Shakespeare as Literary Dramatist (2003), and Beyond "The Spanish Tragedy": A Study of the Works of Thomas Kyd (2001), and the editor of The First Quarto of Romeo and Juliet (2007) and, with M. J. Kidnie, Textual Performances: The Modern Reproduction of Shakespeare's Drama (2004). He is currently working on a book called Shakespeare and the Book Trade.

NEIL FORSYTH is "professeur honoraire" at the University of Lausanne. He has written a narrative history of the devil entitled The Old Enemy: Satan and the Combat Myth (1989) and he is the author of The Satanic Epic (2003). His most recent book is John Milton: A Biography (2008). One of his essays, "Shakespeare the Illusionist," is about to reappear in a new edition of Macbeth. A Festschrift in his honour, After Satan, has just been published.

JOHANN GREGORY is completing a PhD on Troilus and Cressida at Cardiff University, where he teaches on a medieval and Renaissance literature course. His research interests lie in how Shakespeare represented ideas about literature on the stage. Recent publications include an article on paratexts and matters of taste in Shakespeare and a co-authored article on audience in Assuming Gender, with reviews in Cahiers Élisabéthains, English Studies, Notes and Queries and Shakespeare. He created and manages the blog Cardiff Shakespeare.

STEPHEN BOYD HEQUEMBOURG is a graduate student at Harvard University where he studies and teaches Milton and seventeenth-century literature. His work focuses broadly on the intersections of literature and philosophy, and more particularly on figurations of mind-body interactions. His dissertation, Monism and Metaphor in the Seventeenth Century, explores the rhetoric of materialism in such writers as Thomas Hobbes, Margaret Cavendish, and John Milton.

LYNN S. MESKILL is lecturer in English Literature and Translation at University Paris-Diderot, Paris 7. She holds a BA in Classics from Princeton University and MA and PhD degrees in English from the University of Virginia. She is author of Ben Jonson and Envy (2009). She has published articles on Jonson, Shakespeare, and Milton in ELH, Cahiers Élisabéthains, and HLQ.

ALASTAIR MINNIS is the Douglas Tracy Smith Professor of English at Yale University. He is an author or editor of twenty-two books, his most recent monographs being Fallible Authors: Chaucer's Pardoner and Wife of Bath (2007) and Translations of Authority in Medieval English Literature: Valuing the Vernacular (2009). His latest book, an essay collection edited with Rosalynn Voaden, is Medieval Holy Women in the Christian Tradition, c.1100–c.1500 (2010). Characteristically, Professor Minnis's research methodology brings together reading strategies from literary criticism and the history of ideas, and an interest in medieval philosophy and theology has informed much of his work.

NICOLE NYFFENEGGER is a senior lecturer at the University of Bern. She is co-editor of Fleshy Things and Spiritual Matters (2011) and is about to publish a monograph on authorship and historiography entitled Authorising History. Her present research foci include Orientalism and identity construction, body discourses and gendered spaces. She is currently working on her Habilitation project on human skin as text.

ALICE SPENCER holds a doctorate from Turin University, where she now teaches. Her first book, Dialogues of Love and Government, was published in 2007. She has recently published articles on Bokenham, Chaucer's "Tale of Melibee," Usk, and The Assembly of Ladies. She is currently working on a second monograph, dealing with the works of Osbern Bokenham.
