ELLEKE BOEHMER is the author of Colonial and Postcolonial Literature (1995, 2005), Empire, the National and the Postcolonial, 1890-1920 (2002) and Stories of Women (2005), and the biography Nelson Mandela (2008). She has published four acclaimed novels: Screens Against the Sky (short-listed for the David Hyam Prize, 1990), An Immaculate Figure (1993), Bloodlines (short-listed for the SANLAM award, 2000), and Nile Baby (2008). She edited Robert Baden-Powell's Scouting for Boys (2004), and the anthology Empire Writing (1998), and co-edited JM Coetzee in Writing and Theory (2009), Terror and the Postcolonial (2009), and The Indian Postcolonial (2010). Sharmilla and Other Portraits (2010) is her first short story collection. Elleke Boehmer is Professor of World Literature in English at the University of Oxford and Deputy Director of the Oxford Centre for Life Writing at Wolfson College. She is currently working on a memoir fiction.

DAVID BRITAIN is Professor of Modern English Linguistics at the University of Bern. He is Associate Editor of the Journal of Sociolinguistics, co-author of Linguistics: an Introduction (2009), editor of Language in the British Isles (2007) and co-editor (with Jenny Cheshire) of Social Dialectology (2003). He has co-edited a special issue of the International Journal of the Sociology of Language on dialect death in Europe with Reinhild Vandekerckhove and Willy Jongenburger, published in 2009. His areas of research include language variation and change, English dialectology, and the interface between dialectology and human geography.

BARBARA BUCHENAU is Assistant Professor of Postcolonial Literary and Cultural Studies at the University of Bern. Publications include Der frühe amerikanische historische Roman im transatlantischen Vergleich (2002), Intercultural Negotiations in the Americas and Beyond (edited with Marietta Messmer, 2001) and Do the Americas Have a Common Literary History? (edited with Annette Paatz, Rolf Lohse and Marietta Messmer, 2002). Her areas of research are historical fiction, travel writing, early modern scholarship, Atlantic and Inter-American Studies. She is currently working on cultural mobility, stereotyping and religious typology.

SARAH CHEVALIER is Senior Assistant in English Linguistics at the University of Zurich. She holds a BA in modern languages from the University of Sydney, as well as a Lizenziat in English and French Linguistics and Literature, and a doctorate in English Linguistics, from the University of Zurich. Her research interests are the social and regional varieties of English, onomastics, bi- and multilingualism, and language acquisition. Her first book, Ava to Zac: A Sociolinguistic Study of Given Names and Nicknames in Australia (2006), explored the formation, use and social meanings of personal names. Her Habilitation (recently submitted at the University of Zurich) is concerned with the acquisition of three languages by very young children.

MARTIN HEUSSER is a professor in the English Department at the University of Zurich where he holds the chair for Literatures in English of the 19th and 20th Centuries. He is the author of I Am My Writing: The Poetry of E. E. Cummings (1997) and has edited several volumes of essays on word and image topics, among them Text and Visuality (1999), On Verbal / Visual Representation (2005) and Mediality / Intermediality (2008). His primary research interests lie in word and image studies, American studies and literary theory. At present he is working on a series of articles on the representation of the Vietnam War in photojournalism and the popular media from the 1960s to the 1990s.

ANNETTE KERN-STÄHLER is Professor of Medieval English Studies at the University of Bern. Her areas of research include medieval authorship, concepts of space, the senses in medieval literature and culture, and interrelations between science and literature. She is the author of two monographs: "A Room of One's Own": Reale und mentale Innenräume weiblicher Selbstbestimmung im spätmittelalterlichen England (2002) and "A Missionary Zeal": Besatzung, Entnazifizierung und Umerziehung als Aktionsfeld und im Geschichtsbewusstsein britischer Literaten (2009) and co-author of a book on literature and medical ethics, which is forthcoming.

SIMONE E. PFENNINGER received her doctoral degree in historical linguistics from the University of Zurich. She is a senior assistant at the English Seminar of the University of Zurich, where she teaches courses at the undergraduate level in second language acquisition and psycholinguistics. Outside of the university environment she also completed a teacher training programme to become a certified high school teacher. Her recent work has focused on age effects in instructed second language acquisition (cognitive aspects as well as socio-affective factors of language learning, such as language learning motivation, anxiety, learner strategies). Her current research project is concerned with the question as to whether the mandatory school time in Switzerland is long enough for the benefits of early L2 English instruction to unfold.

PATRICIA RONAN is Maître Assistante at the Department of English at the University of Lausanne, Switzerland. Her main research interests are the languages of Britain and Ireland and their historical development, as well as the linguistic and cultural results of contacts between the different population groups in these areas.

SIMON SWIFT is Senior Lecturer in Critical and Cultural Theory at the School of English, University of Leeds. He is the author of two monographs: Romanticism, Literature and Philosophy (2006; paperback edition published 2008) and Hannah Arendt (2008). His work has also appeared in Textual Practice, Studies in Romanticism, New Formations and Parallax.

MARGARET TUDEAU-CLAYTON is Professor of English Literature and currently head of the Institute of English Studies at the University of Neuchâtel. She is the author of Jonson, Shakespeare and early modern Virgil (1998; reprinted as paperback 2006) as well as of numerous articles on English Renaissance literature, especially on translation and on Shakespeare. She has co-edited three collections of essays: with Martin Warner, Addressing Frank Kermode (1991); with Philippa Berry, Textures of Renaissance Knowledge (2003); and with Willy Maley, This England, that Shakespeare (2010). She is currently working on a book length project, Shakespeare's Englishes: Shakespeare and the Ideology of Linguistic Practices in Early Modern England.
