Notes on Contributors

BRYAN BANKER is a lecturer at the Hochschule Fresenius University of Applied Sciences in Munich, where he teaches interculturality, diversity, language, and ethics. In early 2019, he defended his PhD, titled Black Hegelians: Dialectical Philosophy in the Aesthetics of W. E. B. Du Bois, C. L. R. James, Paul Robeson, and Langston Hughes, in the department of American literature at Ludwig-Maximilian-Universität (LMU) in Munich. In the fall of 2019, he will conduct a seminar in comparative literature at LMU titled “Reading Europe from the Periphery.”

JAMES DORSON is Assistant Professor at the John F. Kennedy Institute for North American Studies, Freie Universität Berlin. His first book is titled Counternarrative Possibilities: Virgin Land, Homeland, and Cormac McCarthy's Westerns (Campus, 2016). He is also the coeditor of Fictions of Management: Efficiency and Control in American Literature and Culture (Winter, 2019) and of two special journal issues: “Data Fiction: Naturalism, Narratives, and Numbers” (Studies in American Naturalism, 2017) and “Cormac McCarthy Between Worlds” (European Journal of American Studies, 2017). His current book project is on competing forms of economic organization in American literary naturalism at the turn of the twentieth century.

COURTNEY JACOBS is PhD candidate and Nancy L. Mergler Fellow at the University of Oklahoma. Her current research project focuses on affective and cognitive approaches to reading “the home” in American women’s literature.

AUDREY LOETSCHER, a graduate of the University of Lausanne, has been pursuing a PhD in American Studies in this institution since February 2016. Thanks to a diversified curriculum, she has developed an interdisciplinary profile and her interests lie at the crossroads of disciplines ranging from the environmental humanities to cultural history, continental philosophy, and political economy. Her dissertation addresses the cultural causes of unsustainability in the United States, and more specifically the relationship between dominant narratives underlying national identity and the unsustainable environmental discourse and practices that have accompanied the country's economic and cultural development.

SIXTA QUASSDORF studied English, general linguistics and philosophy at the University of Basel, and holds a PhD in English linguistics. She has published several articles on phraseology and quotation studies, as well as a monograph titled "A little more than kin": Quotations as a Linguistic Phenomenon, A Study Based on Quotations from Shakespeare's Hamlet (2016). Since then, she has leaned further towards literary and cultural studies. Her current research project – which she is pursuing as a post-doctoral assistant at the University of St Gallen – focuses on the representation of work in contemporary American fiction since the 1970s.

J. JESSE RAMÍREZ (PhD, American Studies, Yale University) is Assistant Professor of American Studies and co-coordinator of the "Technologies" area of concentration in the School of Humanities and Social Sciences at the University of St Gallen.

RONALD SCHLEIFER is George Lynn Cross Research Professor of English and Adjunct Professor in Medicine at the University of Oklahoma. His most recent books are A Political Economy of Modernism: Literature, Post-Classical Economics, and the Lower Middle-Class (Cambridge University Press 2018) and, with Jerry Vannatta, MD, Literature and Medicine: A Practical and Pedagogical Guide (Palgrave 2019).

OLGA THIERBACH-MCLEAN is an independent researcher, author, and literary translator. After studying North American literature, Russian literature, and musicology at the University of Hamburg (UHH) and UC Berkeley, she earned her doctorate in American Studies at UHH. She is the author of various articles on US political culture, as well as the book Emersonian Nation, which traces the resonance of Emersonian individualism in current US discourses on personal rights, identity politics, and social reform. Her main research interests are in the intellectual history of liberalism, American Transcendentalism, and dystopian fiction. Currently, her projects are focused on the significance of race in the cyberpunk genre as well as on interpretations of traditional individualist tenets in contemporary US cinema.
