FEDERAL.

NEW SWISS-GERMAN AGREEMENT.

Negotiations between Switzerland and Germany have led to an agreement on mutual trade matters which is mainly on the same lines of the treaty which recently expired. The quota for Swiss exports to Germany remains unaltered at £835,000, while German exports to Switzerland are to be increased to pay off Swiss creditors. Certain restrictions on German goods will be cancelled and quotas increased.

As far as tourist traffic is concerned, the existing arrangement will continue. 21 million francs have been allotted to this purpose for the second half of the year. Switzerland will import German coal, in exchange for which German tourists will be able to buy coupons for Swiss hotels up to £41 per month and person.

Swiss creditors will receive 800,000 francs a month for interest dues on first mortgages, and the amount set aside for second mortgages will be 10 p.c. higher than hitherto. There is no change in the position of creditors whose demands fall under the stand-still agreement. The new agreement came into force on July 1st, but will expire at the end of December so that Swiss-German trade relations will have to undergo a thorough revision before that time.

FOOLHARDINESS IN THE ALPS.

Following the recent accident on the north face of the Eiger, which caused the death of four persons, the Swiss Federal Council is contemplating the complete prohibition of all attempts to ascend the Eiger by this route, and has asked the local guides committee to submit a report on the subject.

The recent fatal accident was only the last of a series of death falls during the last few years from the north face of the Eiger. The mountain has never yet been ascended by this face.

The Federal Council's attitude will not cause much heart searching in mountaineering circles. The summit of the Eiger has often been reached by other ways, and to attempt it by the terrible north face is merely risking death — and risking also death to rescue parties. Many mountaineers feel that there is a limit to what should be attempted by climbers, especially since the burden of an accident falls upon others.

The utmost caution should be exercised in Switzerland this summer on all mountain excursions, and in all cases the local guides and experts should be consulted before any serious climb is undertaken. The lateness of the summer and the prevailing uncertainty of the weather make such precautions the most elementary wisdom.

GENEVA.

Three men, stated to be agents of the Soviet Government, have been sentenced to imprisonment by a Geneva court for alleged spying on a Ukrainian whom the Russian and Polish police suspected of plotting the assassination of M. Litvinov, Soviet Commissar for Foreign Affairs, and Col. Beck (Polish Foreign Minister).

The charge was that the accused "imperilled the safety of the Swiss Confederation by carrying out espionage for a foreign Government."

According to evidence by the Chief of Police of Geneva, the men were employed to watch the house of Col. Konovalek, the Ukrainian mentioned (who fought against the Bolsheviks in the Russian Civil War), and it was he who was suspected of the murder plot against the Polish and Russian Ministers while they were in Geneva to attend the League Council.

Konovalek is in Amsterdam, but he sent a telegram to the President of the Court saying he is ready to return to Geneva to "denounce Bolshevik intrigues."

Two of the three men were not in court, for they escaped while released on £1,200 bail. In their absence they were sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment.

The third man (a Swiss Communist) received a sentence of 45 days, as he was considered to be a dupe.
