PIANO RECITAL — ALBERT FERBER.

Once again Music Lovers enjoyed the playing of this Artist at his Recital at Wigmore Hall on the 4th November, and in spite of the Saturday the attendance was astonishingly satisfactory. Any other day would, of course, have been better because even Music Lovers after a weeks toil in town like to spend their hard earned week-end outside the City or West-end.

The first part of the programme was devoted to Scarlatti Sonatas of which the most beautiful — the D minor No. 422 — formed the gem in this string of pearls. The Variations on "Vieni Amore" — Beethoven — first known performance in England is uncommon and shows the master in his early stages. There are flashes of the Great to come. The last movement of the Schubert A minor Sonata livened up to a climax — brilliantly played — and compensated listeners for the strain and concentration demanded by the out of the ordinary.

The second part consisted entirely of French Piano music of which I liked best the Impromptu F. minor by Fauré and la Serenade Interrompue by Debussy. Undoubtedly Mr. Ferber's mastery of technic allows him a musical interpretation of the highest order and the terrific sforzandos followed immediately by an ephemeral touch come unbelievably natural.

He rewarded the long applause with Prelude in D-major by Rachmaninoff and a perfect rendering of Jeu d'Artifice by Debussy.

Commendable and courageous as it is for artists to seek out not so well-known and rarely heard works I think Albert Ferber should, in his next Recital, give to his many admirers amongst whom there are not a few enthusiastic amateur pianists the pleasure of hearing him in some of the monumental works of the great masters, works which are known to the average listener who is only too anxious to enjoy the interpretation by a pianist like Ferber.

The Swiss Audience was singularly small, Mr. Ferber for his artistry alone deserves a better support from the Swiss Colony and the few compatriotes present felt somewhat this absence. Maybe that the Saturday had something to do with this.
