The Federal Council has decided to pay back — without conversion — the 3¼ per cent loan issued by the Confederation, amounting to 300 million francs, which became due on 1st November 1958.

The Swiss Federal Government has sent to Parliament a request for a credit of 284 million francs (nearly £23,500,000) to be expended on defence construction needed under the 1951 programme of reorganisation.

* * *

The Federal Council has submitted to the Federal Chambers a draft Budget for 1959 showing a modest surplus, but the biggest defence credits ever proposed in peacetime.

With a £1 million surplus of receipts over expenditure (the latter totals nearly £200 million) the Budget provides about £80 million for defence. The 1958 Budget allocated less than £75 million for the purpose. Defence credits proposed for 1959 cover only conventional armaments.

Rumours in the Swiss press, according to which construction work on a second Gotthard tunnel had started at Goeschenen, are premature, the Swiss Federal Railways declared recently. It is true, however, that a small tunnel is now being driven into the rocks, but it will serve shunting purposes only and it will converge with the St. Gotthard trunk tunnel at a distance of some 650 feet. The Swiss Federal Railways admit that plans for a second cut "are being examined" in connection with the project of an Alpine underground throughway for motor traffic, but final steps to this effect cannot be expected in the near future.

The Ruetli meadow on the shore of Lake Lucerne, Central Switzerland, one of Switzerland's most significant national shrines, became public property only a hundred years ago. This lovely spot where, according to saga and tradition, the Swiss Confederation had been founded back in 1291 and which served as a meeting place for the ancient Confederates several times in the course of the centuries, had been endangered by profiteers who, in 1858, proposed to construct on it a resort hotel. It was thanks to the children of Switzerland, who spontaneously collected an amount of nearly 100,000 Swiss francs, that the Ruetli could be saved and turned over to the Confederation as an inalienable historic site.

The new type first class carriages (4 axles) ordered by the Swiss Federal Railways have been delivered by the manufacturers at such a satisfactory rate that to-day practically all the old type 2 x 3 axle coaches have been withdrawn. A few Pendulum trains (driving cabs at either end) which cannot be replaced until next spring are the only exception.

Switzerland has accepted another 150 Hungarian refugees at present residing in Austria. This brings the number of Hungarian refugees in Switzerland to 12,719. [A.T.S.]
