PESTALOZZI VILLAGE JUBILEE

On Sunday, 8th May, the Swiss Pestalozzi Children's Village celebrated its twentieth anniversary. The foundation stone had been laid on 28th April 1946. Today, the "village of peace" consists of several buildings and houses over 200 children from all parts of the world. Nearly eight hundred children have spent vital years in this international centre founded by the Swiss architect Walter Corti.

The founder and many personalities from Swiss public life attended the anniversary celebration to which the children themselves contributed by musical and other performances.

Dr. Corti said that unfortunately, ideologies still counted for more than human beings. Religions and Parties and other doctrines kept people apart. At the Pestalozzi Village, however, man was put above ideologies, and the endeavour was for a community of peace, freedom and friendship.

The Village newspaper "Freundschaft", written, edited and produced by the children themselves, was published as a special jubilee issue. It carried the coloured flags of the nations represented at the Village on the front page, surrounding their symbol, the ladybird on a four-leaved clover. The magazine, the sixtieth issue, contained contributions from grateful former inmates who have gone out into the world trying to follow the principles set by the Pestalozzi Village.
