P.O.W RETURNS TO ADELBODEN AFTER 25 YEARS

During the second world war, escaped prisoners of war from the British Commonwealth, as well as shot-down bomber crews from USA, were interned at Adelboden, in the Bernese Oberland. Now, twenty-five years after his enforced stay in Switzerland, Mr. James M'Guckin, today head waiter at the Grand Central Hotel in Belfast, has spent a winter holiday at Adelboden with his family. This come-back was made possible by the co-operation of the RAF Winter Sports Association, the Swiss National Tourist Office and the Adelboden Tourist Office.

Mr. James M'Guckin served in the 50th Division Green Howards in North Africa, where he was captured by the Germans and handed over to the Italians. After the collapse of the Italian army, he fled across country, finding shelter in an Italian farmhouse. Eventually, the underground resistance movement organised his escape. In return for services rendered, it was arranged that the Italian guide should be given James M'Guckin's shoes shortly before reaching the frontier. Subsequently, James M'Guckin made his way across the Swiss border barefoot. This time he and his family have enjoyed a carefree vacation at Adelboden.

In the English Church at Adelboden, tribute was paid to the soldiers for whom there was no return in a commemorative service attended by the British Chargé d'Affaires in Berne.
