A director in the bespoke trade

Mr. Bruno Frei, one of our readers and the only Swiss that we know of in the bespoke trade in London, was recently appointed a director of the firm he has worked for during the past two years, Maurice Sedwell of Saville Row.
Mr. Frei, who is also an indispensable organiser of the Swiss Catholic Youth Club and can be seen at all its parties at the John Southworth Centre, came to England from Switzerland in 1962 for a one-year study of English — and he's still here. His first job in this country was with a leading Swiss tailor of the time, Mr. J. L. Guggenheim, proprietor of Peacock and Co. Mr. Frei arrived in England at 3 p.m. and by 4.30 the same afternoon was working for this firm as a coat-maker. Six years later, he joined Henry Poole and Co. of Cork Street, London, and two years ago he became the "right hand man" of Maurice Sedwell, who runs his own business in Saville Row.

The nominations to a seat of director was a show of appreciation for Mr. Frei's contribution to the firm. We should like to extend our warmest congratulations for this success and are glad to note that Mr. Frei is bringing to England the traditions of Swiss conscientiousness and workmanship.
