

Zeitschrift: The Swiss observer : the journal of the Federation of Swiss Societies in the UK
Herausgeber: Federation of Swiss Societies in the United Kingdom
Band: - (1974)
Heft: 1684

Artikel: The new Swiss film
Autor: Truninger, C.A.
DOI: <https://doi.org/10.5169/seals-686512>

Nutzungsbedingungen

Die ETH-Bibliothek ist die Anbieterin der digitalisierten Zeitschriften. Sie besitzt keine Urheberrechte an den Zeitschriften und ist nicht verantwortlich für deren Inhalte. Die Rechte liegen in der Regel bei den Herausgebern beziehungsweise den externen Rechteinhabern. Siehe Rechtliche Hinweise.

Conditions d'utilisation

L'ETH Library est le fournisseur des revues numérisées. Elle ne détient aucun droit d'auteur sur les revues et n'est pas responsable de leur contenu. En règle générale, les droits sont détenus par les éditeurs ou les détenteurs de droits externes. Voir Informations légales.

Terms of use

The ETH Library is the provider of the digitised journals. It does not own any copyrights to the journals and is not responsible for their content. The rights usually lie with the publishers or the external rights holders. See Legal notice.

Download PDF: 16.05.2025

ETH-Bibliothek Zürich, E-Periodica, <https://www.e-periodica.ch>

THE NEW SWISS FILM

by C. A. Truninger

The year 1962 can be considered the starting point of a new and independent Swiss cinema. Following a plebiscite, a law providing federal aid to film-makers greatly improved the conditions of film production. Since 1970, the State has increased its aid by awarding prizes for high-quality films and scenarios. This federal support was not an unmixed blessing, however. Although the one who pays the piper (in this case the government) does not explicitly call the tune, the Swiss film-maker is aware that it would behave him to treat the political content or implications of his work with a caution that is sometimes less than totally compatible with artistic freedom.

A case in point is that of Jurg Hassler, who in 1970 made the first full-length film dealing with contemporary Swiss political life, KRAWALL. It covered a youth revolt in Zurich which had been put down by the police. KRAWALL was quite unexpectedly shown on television and even won a government prize. However, his second film, even though it dealt with the relatively apolitical subject of apprenticeship, did not receive a television broadcast or any other recognition and Hassler is financially unable to continue working on films. His situation is quite representative of that of Swiss film-makers as a whole.

Unfortunately the Swiss film-maker has few, if any, financial sources besides the Government. Swiss films are sometimes shown on television or in special film forums or clubs, but very seldom in the ordinary cinema theatres because they do not find distributors.

In other words, there is only a limited possibility of attracting a large general audience to domestic films. Apart from a creature of purely theoretical existence, the independent and wealthy cineast — Swiss film-makers are in an extremely difficult position. Once his film is completed, the producer/film-maker/director (often the same person) can only hope to sell it to television or win a government prize to recoup his investment. If these two avenues turn up as dead ends, he is forced to scramble for money on his own, like Jean-Luc Godard, to work outside Switzerland.

Despite these difficulties, there is an encouraging amount of film activity in the country. A national film festival, the SOLOTHURNER FILMTAGE, is held every February in Solothurn. The whole production of the past year is shown to the critics. This year there were 140 journalists, 20 of whom were from abroad, other film-makers, and the public.

In discussing trends in Swiss films, it is important to remember that the Swiss cinema is divided into two sections, French and German. The German-language films have Zurich as their main centre of activity. Most of the Swiss-German films are either documentaries or experimental shorts. Themes of social unrest and agitation are fairly common, mirroring a somewhat typical "underground" world view. The French-language films, on the other hand, tend more toward feature-length dramas, and are somewhat less adventurously avant-garde.

Because of the Swiss-German film-makers' willingness to be highly experimental, a chronic shortage of funds is more the rule than the exception. Perhaps one of the most remarkable Swiss-German films of the last year is TONIGHT OR NEVER by Daniel Schmid, who studied in Berlin and worked with German director F.W. Fassbinder. With a budget of 20,000 dollars, Schmid shot a feature-length 16 mm colour film (blown up to 35 mm) which portrays bourgeois society as both ludicrous and detestable in a style highly reminiscent of Visconti. Despite favourable critical attention, financial success has been minimal to date. Of a cast and crew of 50, no one has been paid. There is however a chance that TONIGHT OR NEVER will be distributed in Great Britain.

The Swiss word for rugged durability. Tissot.

With watches, as with cars, you tend to get what you pay for.

Buying a cheap watch is a bit like entering a lottery. Buying a Tissot is much more like making an investment in the soundest of Swiss banks.

Every Tissot is built to last, to have the ruggedness to take knocks without flinching. Choice of models is wide, in stainless steel or gold plate. All watches in the Tissot Seastar range, some of which are shown here, are automatic with date and water-resistant. Seastar prices begin at £21.75 and go up to £41.00 for a gold plate model with day/date on an integral bracelet.

If you want to move up to a better watch without paying the earth, it must be Tissot. The knowledgeable Swiss themselves buy more Tissots than any other watch.

See your Tissot jeweller. Or write for our men's and ladies' catalogue. Tissot, 67-74 Saffron Hill, London, EC1N 8RS.

T+
TISSOT
The Swiss watch the Swiss buy

Another successful effort at breaking from purely documentary films was undertaken by Peter von Gunten. His film, THE EXTRADITION, shot in black and white, tells the story of the Russian revolutionary Njetchajew who was expelled in 1872 from Switzerland to Russia where he was put on trial for murder. For the first time in a Swiss-German feature-length film, Peter von Gunten engaged a star from abroad: the French actress Anne Wiazemsky, former wife of Jean-Luc Godard. The film has been shown with success in Switzerland, but has yet to be screened in France.

On the French-Swiss cinema scene, perhaps the most interesting phenomenon is Group Five. Some years ago,

French-Swiss television decided to support the production of feature films, acting as co-producer, which led to the formation of Group Five. The most prominent of this Group are TANNER, SOUTTER and GORETTA, whose film L'INVITATION won a prize at the Film Festival in Cannes 1973. The film was much talked of in London as well. The group is not itself a production unit with its own financial management but operates as a pooling agency which affords a common legal base to the five participating film-makers. They retain full economic autonomy and individually assume all the risks of their production. Within the Group Five framework, each has complete independence. The best-known film-maker of this group is Alain Tanner. With his film LA SALAMANDRE (shot in 35 mm on a 50,000 dollar budget), Tanner became the first Swiss film-maker who was able to gain an international reputation while staying in his native country. Of course, Group Five benefits only five film-makers. Many others have been unable to find a place for their work in the small television market.

Apart from the perennial problem of financing, the severely limited domestic market is the chief handicap of Swiss films. If independent film-making is to continue to grow in Switzerland the film-makers must set their sights beyond the admiration of a small "in-group" and try to gain the confidence of the general audience.

Scene from "The Extradition" (by courtesy of Barbera Bernet, Lucerne).

TRAVEL WEEKLY TO AND FROM SWITZERLAND AND ENGLAND

Providing DOOR TO DOOR SERVICES with vans specially equipped to carry

- Household Removals.
- Exhibition Goods.
- Works of Art. — Machinery.

For full information contact

In Switzerland FRITZ KIPFER, Statthalterstr. 101, 3018 Berne. Tel: 031/55 50 55. Telex: 32693

In England LEP PACKING LTD. Corney Road, Chiswick, London W.4. Tel: 01-995 1300 (Ext. 110) Telex: 23944