walls for roads, dams, dikes and breakwaters, avalanche breaks, etc. The elements are secured together by small steel trusses and can also be used for top work; they resist a lateral pressure of 50 tons. In addition, they possess the advantage of being easy to move and re-use elsewhere, when widening a road for example.

SWISS ATOMIC CLOCKS FOR THE FRENCH NAVY

A Swiss firm in Lausanne, specialising in the manufacture of highly technical complicated watches, has just supplied two rubidium atomic clocks to the French Navy. These two clocks have been specially designed and made according to the specifications of the French Navy, which has already in the past placed orders with this Swiss firm, well known for its avant-garde research department and the reliability of its products. The high precision of the clocks just supplied is truly remarkable: they vary, in fact, by less than 1 second in 3 centuries, i.e. 1.10^{-10} seconds per month.

SWITZERLAND – AN INSURANCE CENTRE

According to the figures given by the Swiss Reinsurance Company, in Zurich (Switzerland), the gross amount of the premiums received by all Swiss insurance and reinsurance companies totalled 14.06 billion francs in 1972, which represents an increase of 10.2% of the volume of premiums recorded in 1971, about two-thirds of this increase being attributable to foreign transactions. A quarter of the amount received is accounted for by life assurance companies, a quarter by professional reinsurers and half by accident and damage insurance companies. In 1972, the premiums of life assurance companies increased by 13.7% to total 3.48 billion francs, those of accident and damage insurance increased by 11.7% to total 7.18 billion francs and those of professional reinsurers increased by 4.2% to reach the figure of 3.4 billion francs. The premiums received by foreign insurance companies domiciled in Switzerland amounted in 1972 to about 189 million francs, i.e. some 7.7% higher than in 1971.

Gipsy Travels through the Swiss Jura

It's now possible to enjoy a carefree gipsy's life in the Swiss Jura from May till October. You can travel from ten to thirteen miles a day with a horse and cart. You set off from Lucelle which can be reached by car via Laufen-Porrentruy or Delemont and by train to Delemont and from there by postal coach. The itinerary takes eight days and leads past Courgenay, Roche d'Or, Montmelon, Montfaucon and Sornetan returning to Lucelle. You stay at hotels along the way. All the horses belong to the "Bund" breed and don't need an experienced hand to be driven. All-inclusive cost for a group of four comes to Fr.46 per person daily. This includes the use of a fully equipped gipsy cart, hotel accommodation in a double room with bath or shower, breakfast, care of the horse, insurance, maps and travel documents. Preparations Under Way for Vevey's Winegrowing Festival in 1977

The small town of Vevey in the very heart of the vineyards on Lake Geneva is preparing for this century's fourth Winegrowing Festival which is to take place in August, 1977. The very first one of its kind was held as far back as 1797. It was staged on Vevey's well-known market-place, the "Grande Place" in an Alpine decor. At the last Festival which took place in 1955, 3,500 extras, 950 children, 450 singers and 120 musicians performed before an audience of 1,700. Marcel Maréchal, director of the "centre dramatique" in Lyon and, as of late, director of the Avignon Festival, is in charge of the staging for the 1977 Festival. Eugène Dénéreaz (president of Switzerland's biggest convention ever, the Rotarians' congress in Lausanne in 1973) will be the administrative director.

and Pastry has been entirely renovated and its exhibition of over 100 different kinds of Swiss loaves is especially noteworthy. Original vehicles illustrate the development of transport and tourism at the Swiss Transport Museum. The Old Quarter boasts an incredible amount of cafés, bars and art galleries. Lucerne: An Attractive City Throughout the Year

The city of Lucerne is to remain attractive to tourists throughout the year and not just during the summer months. Only twelve of its seventy hotels do not stay open all the year round. Beside the usual "musts" such as its Lion Monument and the Glacier Garden, Lucerne boasts further cultural points of interest. Its Museum of Swiss Costumes and Folklore has a collection of over 100 costumes and rustic implements. The Archive of the Swiss Yodelling Association adjoins this museum. and at Bergun (as from next summer). The holiday apartment register of the "Schweizerische Gemeinützige Gesellschaft" (Swiss Co-operative Society) at Brandschenkestrasse 36, CH-3001 Zurich, has the largest choice of holiday apartments (5,000 in 800 places in Switzerland). Lists of vacant apartments, chalets and private rooms are also obtainable from tourist offices at resorts.

Young people should consult the list of Swiss Youth Hostels of "Jugi-Tours", CH-8958 Spreitenbach. The SNTO has reissued a 1974 "Motel list" intended for motorists. People wanting to stay in Alpine huts should apply to the tourist association "Naturfreunde" (Birmensdorferstrasse 67, CH-8036 Zurich) which is also open to non-members. SNTO's new map "Camping Holidays in Switzerland" indicates the location of camping sites. Two new SNTO brochures: "Children's Homes and Institutions in Switzerland" (with about 80 addresses in all parts of Switzerland) and "Holiday Language Courses and Centres in Switzerland for 1974" offer useful holiday information* for children and young people.

FROM "ANGEL OF THE AIR" TO "FLYING HOSTESS" 40 Years of Swissair Hostesses

"The Americanisation of our air transport industry is making rapid progress. The new American high-speed aircraft pioneered by Swissair have now been joined by the stewardess (or hostess, as she is called in the USA). This is a blonde, curly-haired young lady with long eye-lashes whose job it is to assist and comfort passengers on board the "Condor" between Zurich and Berlin, ministering to their greater and lesser needs. The angel in question wears a fabulously cute blue trouser-skirt and an extremely natty student's cap. Journalists who were privileged to be present on the demonstration flight Zurich - Basle - Geneva - Berne - Zurich are full of enthusiasm for Swissair's latest achievement."

This rapturous commentary was going the rounds of the Swiss press in 1934. The "angel in the fabulously cute trouser-skirt" was Nelly Diener, Europe's first stewardess, who pampered Swissair's passengers on the Zurich - Stuttgart - Leipzig - Berlin route. She performed her task on board the (at that time) ultra-modern Curtiss Condor.

Compared with present-day comfort, of course, this aeroplane was positively spartan: for lack of a proper kitchen, Nelly Diener served her fifteen guests out of a wicker basket, which contained not only sandwiches and drinks but also the first-aid kit. Passengers had to pay for their food and drink and weren't by any means stingy with tips for the stewardess. The "flying angel's" main task was to talk to the guests, and to calm and reassure those who felt measly during turbulent weather.

But Swissair was growing rapidly and soon found it couldn't manage with only a single stewardess. (It was not until later that the ladies became known as hostesses). The striking success achieved by Nelly Diener called for an expansion of this new service. And so it came about that, when Swissair purchased four DC-2s with seats for 14 passengers, four new stewardesses were engaged, one for each aircraft.

Johanna Bigler-Vögeli, one of these four "flying angels", recalls that at that stage the stewardesses were no longer wearing trouser-skirts, but white aprons which made them look like nurses.

All the while, Swissair continued to push the boundaries of aviation further back, following one pioneering
