REACH FOR THE SKY!

British Airways' "Gateway to Europe" became the Gateway to the Stars when American astronaut Tom Stafford made the city a recent stopover point.

Stafford - Commander of the joint Apollo-Soyuz mission - was in Switzerland for talks with the Omega watch company on the special speedmaster watches used by American astronauts.

At a welcome reception in Basle, British Airways' District Superintendent Mr Tony Wadlow seized the opportunity to inform Commander Stafford that when the veteran astronaut went to the moon on a previous space mission, he covered the equivalent of British Airways'
