...SWEET HOME

Each season brings its own pleasures and, with winter on the doorstep, we turn again to the sweet joys of home. The Englishman says proudly, « My house is my castle ». However, this sense of attachment to the home is not peculiar only to the nation which has given it so excellent a definition. The feeling also finds expression in the care taken to make one's house not merely habitable, but also comfortable, pleasing to the eye, convenient to live in and, in every way suitable for the purpose one requires of it, in accordance with the tastes of the master of the household.

Statistics show that Switzerland is one of the countries whose inhabitants spend the most, on an average, for home comfort ; besides, this country is also reputed for the extension of its hotel trades considered as a branch of national economy. In Switzerland, therefore, there is a highly developed sense of the « home », a desire for convenience and comfort. This being so, it is not surprising that the national textile industry should have been directed towards the manufacture of all the speciality products used in furnishing — curtains, carpets, table and bed-linen, hangings, upholstery fabrics, and the like. We do not propose to give here a systematic survey of this production, but merely to examine the different types of products in whose manufacture Switzerland excels, as will be seen from the rich documentation presented by manufacturers to illustrate the present publication.

Our survey begins with curtain fabrics, because it is they who screen our private dwellings from the street and public view ; a cold, anonymous room becomes cosily intimate as soon as its windows are adorned with the gauzy fabrics which distinguish the individual home, separating its inhabitants from the world outside. The small, frilly « window-pane curtain » can be of plain or fancy marquissette, plain or printed voile, of net, tulle — plain or more or less richly embroidered — trimmed with flounces, pleats, frills, ruchings or fringes — hanging straight across the pane or held in folds by a loop, applied directly against the window or from slightly projecting rods ; plain or embroidered linen blinds also screen the sun's too brilliant rays. All these products are typical of the textile industries of St. Gallen and its neighbourhood.

Framing the windows, gay or sober in colour, airy light or falling in austere folds, are the « big » curtains which create the atmosphere and ambiance of a room. These generally match the furniture and the same fabrics are often used to screen off doors or as wall hangings. Staple fibre is still greatly employed for this purpose — for this fibre has proved its worth — or linen and cotton, too, again enjoying their old-time popularity. In all these lines, colours are made especially light and wash fast.

Then too, there are the brocades and damasks, the heavy, plain or fancy satins with single or double warp, with Jacquard designs or stripes. Prints also — and in this field the Swiss textile industry has made great strides in perfecting printing processes and finishing, and can now offer a wide range of extremely artistic and beautifully made fabrics : classic cretonnes, Jouy percales, modern washable and permanently glazed chintzes. The printed fabrics are machine or hand-printed (screen printing) according to the value of the finished product ; the most exclusive designs are, of course, hand-printed on the finest materials. Owing to its glazed finish, chintz — now immensely popular — has the great advantage of not dirtying very quickly, and not absorbing smells (in restaurants, furnishings are exposed to tobacco fumes) and of being so resistant that they wear extremely well when used for upholstery. Our list must also include the nursery prints especially designed for the decoration of children's rooms. Some firms have specialized in upholstery fabrics of cotton or wool, stronger and heavier than those used for hangings.

Speaking of furniture, we must mention bedspreads and divan covers, rustic or classical in design, hand or machine-woven. Organdies and voiles, fancy and printed, make attractive cases for bed quilts. In the hotel trade, white or coloured cotton bedspreads (which can be boiled) are often used to protect the blankets. These covers, produced in honeycomb patterns, reps, piqués or quilted satins, are woven on Jacquard looms. Switzerland supplies big hotels all over the world with these goods, the name of the establishment being woven in as for table-linen and towels. We shall not speak at length here of the linen industry, with which we dealt more particularly in our second 1948 number, but would only say that pure and half-linen fabrics are in demand for the hotel trades and private households. Colour-woven cloths (Jacquard) can be obtained either finished with woven edging, in standard sizes, or by the piece. Our list would be incomplete without mention of table-cloths and doilies with matching napkins in plain, embroidered or appliquéed organdie, embroidered and appliquéed net, fancy printed table-covers, cloths with imitation hand-work embroidery and, lastly, linens and canvases for needlework.

And lastly we come to carpets... the down-trodden carpets, without which the most beautifully furnished home would be cold, uncomfortable and alien and which isolate the cold rising from floors and pavings. There are carpets of all styles to suit all tastes and pockets. Hand-knotted or machine made — bedside rugs, stairs, squares, body carpets, — plain, warp printed — classical, oriental or modern in design — fine Wiltons, Axminsters and Oriental styles (the latter are produced in Switzerland by an original patented process), velvet and non-cut piles, Brussels, tapestries or looped hairyarns textures. All these lines — in pure wool, pure wool and hair mixtures, — are produced on standard or Jacquard wire looms, in light-fast colours, on cotton, hemp and jute grounds. Swiss carpet factories also produce all kinds of coir mats and carpets, mentioned in passing as we close this all too brief review of Swiss furnishing specialities.
