Cotton dresses for day and evening wear

SWISS FABRIC GROUP

The twelfth Fashion Show of the SWISS FABRIC GROUP, which took place at the Hotel Pierre in New York on February 8th, presented dresses, suits and accessories made of Swiss cotton fabrics; more than thirty-five designers and manufacturers took part as well as fifteen firms specialising in accessories. Over sixty-five models were shown, each of them provided with its own accessories also made of Swiss cottons. Thus there were no isolated items or outfits put together haphazardly at this elegant showing of spring fashions, but complete outfits each detail of which was a carefully thought out and integral part of the whole.

All these suits and dresses were taken from the current spring and summer collections and may be ordered from the firms that presented them. The diversity of uses to which Swiss cotton fabrics are put in the United States was made apparent by the great variety of suits and accessories shown. There was a little of everything :

suits for town and country, afternoon and cocktail dresses, bridal gowns, bridesmaids' dresses, lovely dresses for babies and little girls, beachwear, a swimsuit in printed cotton and a raincoat with umbrella to match in a light waterproof fabric, batiste lingerie, dressing gowns and housecoats that were both distinctive and elegant. This year there was a tendency to make matching accessories in the same fabrics as the dresses or in fabrics that go with them; one of the interesting features of this parade was the displaying of big and small hats, light and flattering sunshades in plain pastel shaded organdy trimmed with ruching, and bags, scarfs and neckerchiefs in light fabrics. The dresses and suits represented a large section of the American clothing industry, since the wholesale prices of the models shown ranged from $12.50 to $190.—

The firms taking part in this parade of spring and summer elegance came from different parts of the United States, as widely apart as New York, Dallas (Texas) and Los Angeles. The accessories were supplied by the best New York firms.

This annual New York fashion show was organised by Mr. Stanley Brown for the SWISS FABRIC GROUP, Inc., New York, which represents the interests of the Swiss cotton industries; as usual only the retail trade and members of the press were invited. It was thus a open-work embroideries to brocaded broadcloths, from embossed fabrics to those with woven pleats, from plain voiles to fabrics with permanent pleats.

Original effects combine colour printing with flocking in designs that are both rich and unusual. All these variants in technique and interpretation make it possible for the better American ready-to-wear manufacturers to use exclusive fabrics, created for only one particular firm. Swiss manufacturers are able to provide these fabrics because they are organised for a high quality veritable preview of what will be worn this coming summer. Not only were the fabrics outstanding for the variety of their textures, but the prints were in very modern designs and their colours far in advance of current fashions in the United States; they bring to New York the most recent and original ideas from Paris, for Switzerland works largely for the Parisian Haute Couture from which it draws its inspiration.

The mention of Swiss cotton fabrics immediately conjures up visions of filmy organdies and classic embroideries. But Swiss production is so varied at the moment and so new, that one finds not only sheer fabrics light as tissue paper, but also a great variety of more opaque fabrics suitable for summer suits, light raincoats and traveling coats. It ranges from the lustrous and plain batistes to the soft and shimmering cotton satins, from production, which is all the more adaptable as it does not go in for the system of mass production.

The firms taking part in this Fashion Show are only a fraction of those that import their fabrics directly into the United States.

Among the well-known New York firms that import Swiss fabrics only, mention may be made of Lanella Corporation, with its light flannels in cotton and wool for casual dresses, children's underwear and dressing gowns, Ottavia, Inc. which has revived in New York the fashion for Swiss frame-embroidered curtains, M.E. Feld & Co., representing and importing embroideries and organdies exclusively from Switzerland.

Among the numerous Fashion Shows that take place in New York at this time of the year, that of the Swiss Fabric Group struck a note of youthful elegance thanks to the qualities of Swiss cotton fabrics as well as to the American designers and ready-to-wear clothing manufacturers who have a flair for using them to their best advantage.
