From the necessary to the superfluous...

One could write pages and pages on the subject of handkerchiefs, their evolution, the different forms they assume and the variety of uses to which they are put, from their original and lowly utilitarian purpose to the feminine whims that turn them into the most superfluous but at the same time most irreplaceable of fashion accessories. What an opportunity for an essayist or a moralist! What a wonderful opportunity to dash off a few volumes full of considerations of unfathomable depth, couched in the jargon of modern psychology!

And yet if one wishes to refrain from this pseudo-philosophy or even purely industrial considerations, which would be out of place here, it is difficult to be systematic in one's treatment of the subject because handkerchiefs, whether in the form of pocket handkerchiefs, decorative wisps of lace or fichus defy any attempt at definition owing to their great variety. Each manufacturer produces the type that corresponds to his tastes or his commercial ambitions, to the kind of clientele he is catering to. The small square of white linen has been transformed into every imaginable shape and size: it has been decorated with colour-woven designs, printed subjects and clip-cord motifs; it has been hemmed by hand, embroidered with posies of flowers or human figures. It has been decorated with delightful prints of flowers, animals, landscapes, period scenes or humorous cartoons, equipment for hunters, fishermen and other sportsmen, guides for tourists, gastronomic souvenirs with recipes of local specialities, horoscopes, calendars, makes of motor cars or cigarettes, etc. Enlarged, the handkerchief has been made into a fichu, a «gavroche» or neckerchief; shrunk—intentionally—it has been transformed into a purely decorative fashion accessory. From being square it has become rectangular and can also be used as a traycloth for an informal snack; circular, it can be used for wrapping up sweets... The designs are so elegant, the colours so charming and the prints so fine that they can even be hung up on the wall as decoration.

Ever new, amusing and up to date, Swiss handkerchiefs, fichus, fancy hankies and scarves, whether made of linen, cotton, silk, nylon or wool, whether they can be classified as indispensable necessities or necessary frivolities, are appreciated far and wide for they are admirable suited to all uses and tastes.
